Marina Svetlova Acclaimed By Large Audience Last Night

By DAVID J. GOWANS

Yesterday evening an enthusiastic audience of well over five hundred people enjoyed a remarkable performance. This was the first of a series of three sponsored by the Murray Civic Music Association.

That Marina Svetlova is a Prima Ballerina was amply demonstrated throughout the performance. Hers was the extremely difficult task of maintaining the interest of an audience without the elaborate scenery customarily seen with ballet and with a minimum of lighting effects. Miss Svetlova surmounted the task with aplomb. The costumes for the ballerina were designed by herself. They were extremely effective—from the purity of the white in Saint-Saens' "Dying Swan" to the gay dress worn in the "Grande Valse" from "Gaiete Parisienne" by Offenbach.

The tour de force of the evening was "The Nutcracker, a Ballet," Opus 71, by Tchaikovsky. This was a brilliant Pas de Deux with George Zoritch providing an able foil for the petite ballerina. Mr. Zoritch is on leave from the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. His dancing was executed with a deceptive ease and grace that belied the difficult technique involved.

Jose Barrera is one of the great flamenco dancers of the Spanish Peninsula. The audience thoroughly enjoyed his rhythmic and mastery of dynamics. His handling of the castanets in Llorca's "Viva Navarra" was a joy to the ear.

The piano accompanist and soloist was Theodore Haig. He had the herculean task of providing the music for the entire program; this he did ably and well. His solo pieces consisted of "Sonata 123 de Petrus" and "Etude in F minor" by Liszt, "Scherzo in Bb minor" and the "Minute Waltz" by Chopin. An interesting encore was the "Nocturne" by Scriabin.

Rockefeller Wings Way To New Guinea

By ROBERT C. MILLER

United Press International

EN ROUTE WITH ROCKEFELLER TO NEW GUINEA (UPI) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller flew toward New Guinea today with heavy-hearted news that searchers had failed to find a trace of his missing son along the island's treacherous southern coast.

Rockefeller's plane was due in Baka off Dutch New Guinea's north coast at 5 p. m. EST.

Reports from Hollandia said that as darkness fell on New Guinea today Dutch air, sea and land search parties reported no sign of 23-year-old Michael Rockefeller. He was last seen Sunday swimming with empty gas cans in tow toward New Guinea's south coast from which he and a Dutch companion had drifted.

The companion, R. J. Wassink, was found Monday, floating on their native prahu boat 22 miles at sea. He was reported to have said Rockefeller's "restless nature" made him try to make the shore instead of waiting in the boat for aid to come.

Stop In Hawaii

Michael's father, governor of New York, and his twin sister, Mrs. Mary Strawbridge, stopped over Monday night off Dutch New Guinea.

An affiliate of KLM Airlines said a heavier aircraft was being readied to the governor could join the search personally if he wished.

"The governor can use the plane as long as he needs it as a spokesman said. 'The plane is waiting for him at Merakue air strip.'

The plan was for the governor to transfer from his jet at Baka to a propeller-driven C-47 to fly to Hollandia. From there he could hop across the territory's central mountains ranges the last 550 miles to Merakue, closest point to the search.

Keeps In Contact

Before leaving Hawaii, a spokesman for the governor said that Mrs. Rockefeller was keeping "in close contact" with developments in New York. The Rockefellers announced "shortly before their son's disappearance that they have separated and plan a divorce at their 31-year marriage.

Dutch officials directing the search for Michael were reported to have turned their concentration from the sea to the land today, replacing fast Neptune planes with slower, ski-equipped Beavers to search the swampy coastline filled with crocodiles.

A party of Dutch marines was put ashore to search both sides of the coast from the islands River from which Rockefeller and Wassink drifted.

Two natives who had been with the two were reported today to have dove into the ocean and to have reached shore safely on Saturday. A native search craft that first went out failed to find the drifting prahu.

California Parched, Now Sea Of Mud

By United Press International

Drought-baked California dissolved into a sea of mud, damaging homes, and an old fashioned Thanksgiving storm clogged New England with up to eight inches of snow today.

Gully washing rains from the Pacific Coast to the Nevada desert Monday were the heaviest in more than a year and broke a three-year drought. Farmers cheered. City dwellers cursed.

San Francisco measured 1.71 inches of rain and Los Angeles 1.23 inches. Mud slides and floods closed highways near San Francisco. Wind gusts ripped out power lines in the Bay area.

More Rain Expected

Another round of showers was expected today in Southern California, where nearly two inches fell Monday on the Santa Monica Mountains, sending floodwaters rushing through lowland areas and producing mud slides in areas hit by recent forest and brush fires.

Homes were washed from foundations at Glendora and San Dimas. Calif. Mud slides seriously damaged five homes in the Santa Monica Mountains.

Garbage cans and refuse floated through streets in the extensive Rosemead Road district of the Los Angeles area. Autos and fire trucks bogged down in silt-clogged streets.

The heavy rain washed out new seedlings planted in fire swept areas of Southern California in an effort to anchor hill sides denuded of cover.

Snow In East

Snow covered inland areas from western Pennsylvania to Maine and coastal towns in New England were washed by severe rains. Worcester, Mass., measured eight inches of snow in little more than six hours. Concord, N. H., had seven inches and Portland, Maine, had five inches.

Falmouth, Mass., had 2.38 inches of rain.

Windsor Locks, Conn., and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., each had five inches of snow. Parts of New Jersey measured six inches. The area around Washington, D. C., got up to four inches of snow Monday.

Mystery Of Terror Filled Night May Be Locked In Depths of Sea

By JACK V. FOX

United Press International

MIAMI (UPI) — Julian A. Harvey flew 114 combat missions for the U. S. Air Force in the Korean War.

In Europe, during World War II, he flew 29 missions. He won the Distinguished Flying Cross twice, the Air Medal nine times.

Monday, the story of 11-year-old Terry Jo Duperrault pointed a finger of accusation at Harvey as a man who left standing alone on the blood-stained deck of the two-masted Bluebellie at the climax of a terror-filled night in which her family—and his bride of three and one-half months—perished.

A Coast Guard officer said he believed it was a case of "wholesale murder."

The suicide of the 45-year-old Harvey, married five times, seemed to bear out the implications in Terry Jo's story. Terry Jo was the only survivor of a family of five from Green Bay, Wis., who put out on a pleasure cruise to the Bahamas with Harvey and his wife.

Harvey killed himself after Terry Jo was rescued. His story of a broken mast puncturing the boat's hull, of fire at sea, of unavailing attempts to rescue the others was contradicted in almost every major detail.

She said Harvey struck her and forced her below decks, that she saw her mother and brother lying on the cabin floor, that there was no fire. She saved herself, she said, by unhooking a small life raft, on which she floated for nearly four days in the open sea.

The Coast Guard said it believed the girl's story.

Yet, today, it was impossible to find any of his friends or acquaintances who could find any reason for Harvey to have perpetrated such a slaughter.

The last letter from his wife to her brother in Milwaukee said the voyage with the family of Arthur Duperrault had been "very pleasant" and that their passengers were a "very lovely family."

Harvey's sister-in-law in Detroit said she didn't believe the retired Air Force colonel had any guilt in the tragedy.

"I know my sister thought the world of him," said Mrs. C. Raymond Young.

Harvey's closest friend was advertising executive James C. Boozler of Miami. Boozler Monday took Harvey's body to sea and watched it pushed overboard in the burial.

The American Chamber of Commerce Executives is a national management association of some 2,250 local Chamber executives. It is dedicated to the principle of the development and enforcement of ethical standards of practice and the maintenance of high educational standards.

Communists Defy Order Of Government

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U. S. Communist party apparently defied a midnight deadline to register with the government as an agent of the Soviet Union.

Justice Department officials said today that the party now stands liable for a fine of $10,000 each and every day it fails to do so.

The registration deadline was set last June when the Supreme Court upheld a finding by the Subversive Activities Control Board that the U. S. Communists are an arm of the Russian government.

The Communists said in advance they would defy the order. But the Justice Department had kept its switchboards open to receive any communication indicating a last-minute change of mind.

But none came before the clock struck midnight.

Unless the party mailed the appropriate registration forms postmarked before today, it is now in violation of the Internal Security Act of 1950.

The law, which Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy has vowed to enforce vigorously, requires the Communists to register, disclose the names and addresses of officers, file a financial accounting and list their printing presses.

South Has Risen With Bowl Bids

By DICK JOYCE

United Press International

The South has risen again—in the college football bowl picture—that is—with unbeaten and untied Alabama, Louisiana State and Mississippi virtually assured of post-season dates.

Almost every bowl committee in the nation has its sights on Alabama now that the Crimson Tide and Rutgers stand as the only major college teams with perfect records. But where Alabama will go will not be known until the team completes its season on Dec. 2, although the Sugar Bowl looks like the best bet with the Rose Bowl a good possibility.

Once-beaten LSU has the edge on an Orange Bowl berth but the Tigers apparently are looking forward to a Rose Bowl bid, too, since university officials have cleared the way for LSU to compete against Negroes.

Sugar Eyes Ole Miss Mississippi, runnerup with LSU behind Alabama in the Southeastern Conference, is in line for the Sugar Bowl but other invitations are also available.

Top-ranked Texas, which apparently had the Cotton Bowl berth and Southwest Conference all wrapped up, now is in danger of losing both to Arkansas following Saturday's 6-0 upset loss to Texas Christian.

UCLA also hurt its chances to be host team for the Rose Bowl when upset by Washington 17-13, Saturday but the showdown will come next weekend. Then the Uclans meet Southern California in a game which may also determine the Big Five championship.

Although the Rose Bowl committee is no longer committed to select a Big Ten representative, it appears Ohio State and Minnesota have the inside edge.

Colorado apparently was all set to serve as the Orange Bowl's Big Eight representative—but Kansas vaulted into the picture off its 52-7 triumph over California on Saturday.

Tide Boosts Stock Second-ranked Alabama boosted its stock by belting Georgia Tech, 10-0, for its ninth straight victory while Ole Miss dumped Tennessee, 24-10, and LSU downed Mississippi State 14-6.

Next Saturday is the last full scale college football weekend but both Alabama and Mississippi are idle. They don't wind up their seasons until Dec. 2. The Crimson Tide then plays Auburn in seeking to preserve its perfect record. According to an SEC ruling, no post-season bowl bids can be accepted until the season is completed.

The Texas Longhorns can put the pressure on Arkansas for the SW title on Thanksgiving Day when they conclude their season against Texas A & M. Arkansas finishes against Texas Tech next weekend. Both teams stand 5-1 in conference play, but Texas will get the Cotton Bowl bid if they end in a tie, having beaten Arkansas.

Duke Wins ACC Title In addition to the Rose Bowl, Minnesota and Ohio State have a chance to share the Big Ten title if they get by Wisconsin and Michigan, respectively, next Saturday.

Two conference championships were decided on the next-to-last big football weekend. Duke won the Atlantic Coast title with a 6-3 victory over North Carolina while unbeaten but onced Utah State downed Utah 17-6, to finish in a deadlock for the Skyline Conference championship with Wyoming.

Columbia clinched at least a tie for the Ivy League title by trouncing Pennsylvania, 37-6. If underdogs Yale and Dartmouth can up-end Harvard and Princeton respectively, next weekend, the Lions will capture their first Ivy League championship.

did he not throw her overboard.

Terry Jo said she saw her mother and brother lying in blood in the cabin. But, before she ever told her story, Harvey had said two of his passengers were injured when the ship foundered in a sudden squall.

The girl said he was carrying what appeared to be a rifle. In the darkness could she have mistaken it for the wire cutters he said he got but to cut through the tangled rigging?

She said there was no fire. But a close examination of Harvey's story—told previously—showed he had told the Coast Guard the fire was confined to the cockpit area and it was possible the child might not have spotted it on the 60-foot ketch.

The answers to the mystery may never be known.

The Bluebellie lies under more than 700 fathoms of water and could never be located, the Coast Guard said.

Undefeated Alabama Pounds Through Stretch Of Football Season To Grab 1st Place Spot

NEW YORK (AP) — Alabama, pounding through the stretch of the college football season with a perfect record, grabbed the lead from Texas today in the United Press International weekly ratings.

Twenty-five of the 35 leading coaches who comprise the UPI rating board picked Alabama as their No. 1 choice after the Crimson Tide ran its season record to 9-0 by blanking Georgia Tech, 10-0, last Saturday.

Texas, which held down first place for the past two weeks, skidded to fifth place following its first defeat of the season at the hands of Texas Christian, 6-0. The Longhorns drew only one first place vote after being the top choice of 26 coaches a week ago.

Three Move up

Ohio State, Minnesota and Louisiana State also took advantage of the Longhorns' upset defeat, each moving up a notch. Ohio State took over the runner-up spot, Minnesota bumped to third place and LSU advanced to fourth.

Mississippi was the only member of the top 10 not affected by this week's wholesale shake-up.

Ole Miss remained in the sixth slot while Michigan State advanced one notch to seventh. Colorado moved from 10th to eighth, Michigan from 14th to ninth, and Arkansas from 16th to 10th.

Purdue Drops

Purdue dropped from seventh to 13th after losing a 10-7 decision to Minnesota while UCLA, which shared eighth place with Michigan State last week, failed to draw a single vote following its 17-13 loss to Washington.

The second 10 members in addition to Purdue included—Utah State, Kansas, Duke, Wyoming, Missouri, Maryland, Georgia Tech, Notre Dame, Penn State, Rutgers and Wisconsin.

ANCIENT HISTORY:

Gasoline gum used to cause unexpected repair bills. Today, one of Super Shell's 9 ingredients fights off gum—to save you money and give you top performance.

The gum preventive in today's Super Shell is so powerful that one thousandth of an ounce is enough to treat a gallon. Read how this "chemical policeman" works.

THE MECHANIC in our photograph is about to go to work on a gummed up carburetor. A nice little repair job.

But to Shell scientists, gummed-up carburetors are ancient history.

Drip test shows how well Shell gum prevention works. Container on left has raw, unprocessed gasoline without gum preventive, on right—processed gasoline with Super Shell's gum preventive. Gas lines drop raw, heated plates and evaporate, simulating long storage.

And so are other gum troubles. Such as sticky intake valves. And fouled automatic chokes. Here's why: 1. Shell uses refining processes that hold certain gum-forming gasoline components to a minimum.

Result: unprocessed gasoline without gum preventive deposits sticky gum on plate (left). Gasoline with Super Shell's gum preventive leaves virtually no trace of gum (right). No gum, no gum problems. One reason why Super Shell can promise top performance.

2. Shell guards all tanks, pipes, and trucks against dirt and other gum-forming contaminants. 3. Shell includes a powerful gum preventive in Super Shell's nine-ingredient formula.

"Chemical cop" at work

The gum preventive in Super Shell is so effective that a thousandth of an ounce is enough to treat a whole gallon of gasoline.

This remarkable ingredient has been described as a "chemical policeman." It helps to keep unstable elements in gasoline from sticking together—the way a skilled policeman prevents trouble by keeping a crowd from forming.

Hot Weather Blend

For a quick run-down on the other eight ingredients in today's Super Shell, see box at right.

And for top performance all summer, keep your tank filled with Super Shell's Hot Weather Blend. It's specially formulated to fight engine flooding and other hot weather troubles. At Shell stations now.

Here are the 9 ingredients in Super Shell—and what they do to give your car top performance

- #1 is TCP—for power, mileage, and longer plug life.
- #2 is Pentane mix—for fast warm-ups.
- #3 is anti-knock mix—for knock resistance.
- #4 is Alkylate to control "high-speed knock."
- #5 is Butane—for quick starts.
- #6 is "cat-cracked" gasoline—for power.
- #7 is an "anti-icer." Added when cold weather sets in.
- #8 is gum preventive—for clean carburetors.
- #9 is Plateformate for extra mileage.

*Trademark for Shell's unique gasoline additive. Gasoline containing TCP is covered by U.S. Patent 2889222.

CHAPTER 17
ONE DAY toward early evening, Alec Temple saw a swirl of smoke come rising out of the campsite beyond the cabins.

He and Rusty, having passed their day on the slide, were just beginning to head downward, and the size of what he saw stopped him cold.

A moment later, the thunder of heavy equipment northward bound on the canyon road told him there was trouble below. In the clearing the smoke, massive and lifting high, had obscured the sun, which lay through the pall to the north-west. Since the movement of the air was still up canyon and would remain so for another hour, the sky was clear above and to the south.

The thought of night worried Alec unless the fire could be controlled before dark, the evening shift in air motion could easily bring the blaze roaring down through the clearing. But he had to leave Rusty here; he could not take him up to the fire.

He checked the cabins first. Both were empty, as he knew they would be.

He left the clearing and made his way northward through the timber toward the campsite beyond it.

In the brush and trees to his left, the animal life was moving south in a steady unceasing stir and rustling. Contained on either side by reaching cliffs, it had no place to go but north and south, and soon enough his eyes and nose and lungs felt its acid bite.

Still, he could not see the flames until he reached the southern edge of the campsite. He could then, however.

He saw and smelled and tasted and heard the living holocaust. The entire northwestern end of the grounds was a sheet of flame. Like flares, limbs fell from aloft and splashed in fire. Trees became torches as their resin burned like gasoline.

As Alec drew nearer the campsite, he saw the wide lanes which the cats had cleared through the trees and brush south of the fire line. Running at diagonals, the three parallel gashes had the effect, at least for the present, of isolating the burning area from the larger portion of the campsite. In between and ahead of these lanes, groups of men with spades heaved dirt upon sudden outbreaks ignited by air-borne debris.

Up beyond, on the line itself, other groups worked at backfires or felled certain taller trees which, if they went into crown fire, would become a bridgehead for the conflagration to travel south.

The whole idea, as Alec began to see, was to hold the blaze in that far corner of the ground and, failing that, to keep it back against the cliffs if it should somehow bridge the fire lanes.

Toward the middle of the campsite, between the blaze and the creek, a command post of sorts had been set up.

Claude was not there when Alec arrived. For a moment, he stood unnoticed. Then a man caught sight of him.

"Well, Alec, so there you are," he said.

"When the man removed his crash helmet and rubbed his forehead, Alec recognized Pete Ahern from Claude's station."

"Yes, I'm here," Alec said. "I just came up from the clearing."

"Well, you'd better go tell your dad; he's been pretty anxious."

"What for?" Alec said, and he wondered why Claude should be anxious. He knew the woods, and he'd been in no danger so far.

"That ain't exactly a weeny roast out there," Pete Ahern said.

"Well, all right, I'll check in with him," Alec said. "Where's he at, anyway?"

"Where you'd expect," and Pete then waved his hand toward the blaze.

Alec said, "O.K.," and stepped from the shelter. It took a moment for his eyesight to adjust to the light of the blaze, and when it did, Sam Fellows was there.

"Well, I see they found you," Sam said. "I figured that was you pokin' your head in there."

"I WAS Sam all right, though you mightn't know at first glance. The end of his beard had been singed, and the brim of his hat had a half-moon burned in it. An ember had scorched his shirt, and his underwear showed through the hole.

"Nobody found me," Alec said. "I've been on my way since I saw the smoke from the slide."

"That's where they went to look for you," Sam said. "I seen you up there an' told your pa; he sent a crew around by the road to get you."

"Well, I didn't see them," Alec said. "I came up through the timber."

"Not that it matters," Sam said. "Just so long as your pa don't need to worry any more. Trail me; I'll take you to him."

Following Sam through the trees, Alec felt Claude's needless worry around him like a wall. It seemed to make a child of him, with Sam now become his nurse. He was angry with them both, though at the same time he knew it did no good to feel so.

At the head of a fire lane, not far from the creek, Claude stood in the plowed earth, watching a cat buck a deadfall pine out of danger of chance ignition. Hearing Sam and Alec approach, he gave them a glance, then caught himself as he turned away, and looked again.

"Alec!" He said in this second look. Then, as if sight alone was not enough, he shot his hand out to take Alec by the shoulder. "Thank God you're safe!"

"Of course I'm safe," Alec said. "Why shouldn't I be?"

"Why shouldn't you be?" Claude said, and his hand closed tighter upon Alec's shoulder.

Alec felt strangely uncomfortable with his father grasping him and staring at him.

"Here she comes!" Sam said. "The air's changing."

All three turned now, and it was true. Alec felt the softly beginning motion on his cheek. The evening shift had set in, and the colder air from the heights was flowing downward toward the far valleys and lowlands.

"Oh, Lord . . ." Claude said, as if an old wound gave him sudden pain.

But he'd hardly spoken when a thin shout arose from the end of the fire line nearest the cliffs, far away; then it sounded raggedly along its length as other men took it up. And at the same time, as he looked in that direction, it seemed to Alec that something queer had happened to the fire.

While it was still hemmed in against the cliffs, as before, its furthest southern arm had reached out a clawed, crimson hand and seized upon new growth beyond the fire lanes.

Wordily, all three turned and ran through the trees toward the distant line.

Then, as they came abreast of the command post, Alec remembered Rusty. He would be in no danger just yet, but the flames, heading southerly beneath the cliffs, would be in his view before long and would surely terrify him.

"Rusty!" he called out to Claude, who ran ahead of him. "I want to go to him!"

Like a man shot in the back, Claude stopped dead. Swerving around, he took two steps in Alec's direction and stopped again.

"No!" he said in a savage yell. "Don't you dare!"

Stunned, Alec stood without thought or motion, while Claude's face glared down from above.

Alec has greater reason to fear for Rusty's safety as the story continues tomorrow.
